E                                          A
Morning wakes softly and gently stirs the shadows from sleep

             B                             E
dreaming of days long and lazy under the sun.

                                                        A
This city can t make up her mind to rain or to shine, so she

                                          B       B7
does both at the same time, shooting rainbows across a

periwinkle sky.

  E                                            A
Once in awhile she pulls up her clouds and shows you her elegant side

       B         B7             E
wild beauty she does not give freely. Green Lake your indigo waters seduce

       A                                    B               B7          E your lover, the night, lights trace your shores while the deep blue descends on you,

                                      A            B           E
Showering longing kisses under the gaze of the moon s misty eyes.

 E                                                      A
She asks for your soul to seal the deal and you sigh, you re not sure why

                   B       B7     E
you came but you know you can t leave.

  E                                                     A
This city can t make up her mind to rain or to shine, so she does both at the same time, shooting rainbows across a periwinkle sky.
