

Silence Is Golden But Duct Tape Is Silver Against All Authority

This is a great song off the new album, The Restoration Of Chaos And Order.

First song

Chorus (pt.1)

For this you can either play the chords as notated above or power chords. I like to play

power chords for this one. I think it sounds much closer to the original sound on the recording. (The power chords are just the lowest three strings of the chords shown above)

Bridge (pt. 1, instrumental)

This is the part where all the drums and stuff cut out for a bit and then go into the
This can be played as power chords or barre chords, again I play power chords just cause how it sounds in the recording.

You hit on the first B chord there (for any additional guitars as well as bass and It also may be played only 3 times and then on the 4th time go B-A-G. Play around, see which like better. I tend to alternate.

Bridge (pt. 2, with vocals)

The same thing I ve been saying about power chords vs. barre chords goes here as well.
the switching between the chords D and C#, that area of the tab probably needs a little of tweaking.

Hit a D chord a bunch of times, and you ve played the ending. For the bass part to this if you also play bass or are playing in a band with a bassist, you just want to follow guitar chords, playing quarter notes during the non-ska parts. During the ska parts, you to play either eighth notes or eighth note triplets. It doesn't really matter which you but don't play on the last beat of the measure.

The general layout of the song goes as such:

Intro pt. 1
Intro pt. 2
Verse
Chorus pt. 1
Chorus pt. 2
Verse
Chorus pt. 1
Chorus pt. 2
Bridge pt. 1
Bridge pt. 2

or something like that. requests, corrections, comment can be directed at me through UG.
