

Slow Surprise

There is a way that subtle changes come to stay
Barely noticed, hardly known
One day you ll say my situation s locked away
But by tomorrow you re all alone

It seems so sudden, but it s not, it s only grown
From a seed that long ago was left forgotten in the snow

And has a way with slow surprises all its own

It s hard to show, but like a boulder rollin slow
Or a rumble deep in the ground

Things whisper low and by the time I really know
What s been movin they ve settled down
Too late to see the way they shift around
Too late to say there s bound to be another way
It s all been said and done without a sound

This comes to me, and now that I begin to see
It s not dramatic, it s nothing grand
I used to be half of the whole of you and me
Now I m the limit of all I am

It seems so simple, nothin much to under stand
You walked out and closed the door, said I don t live here anymore

And now nothin s hangin heavy in my hands
