At last the winter s come

Dm

he wears his gloves

he s riding on his bike and trying hard to not get lost he doesn t recognise the streets

Dm

no familiar place

F

G C

But as a car rams him off the streets head first, behind the wheel he sees a face

his hands tighten their grip

C

G

but there s no use in holding on to that damn bike while he makes a double flip through the window of a store

F C G

the splintered glass cuts through his clothes and skin before he lands face down on the floor

he opens up his eyes

the walls are white

Apart from the beating in the temples of his head he kinda feels alright and as he pulls himself up his heart skips a beat there s blood on his blanket, but he s scared of what s underneath he tries to kick the blanket off the bed but there s no movement underneath them as he feels the beating stronger in his head the nurse runs in

And as shee empties a syringe in the IV he feels the world begin to spin

Em Am

Have you ever tried to remember a dream or a face in your sleep, well it s hard but somehow he pulled it off

Now he s forever attatched to a chair

Dm

but revenge will be sweet, so you better start to run

You re almost late for work, you grab your coat and when you try to grab the doorhandle you feel a bullet being shot right in your throat

You turn around and as you gasp for air you recognise the face of a man sitting smiling in his chair

You try to stop the bleeding with your hand, but there s no use in trying to stop one hole from bleeding when it drips out the other end you re losing sight and while you regret the hit and run from years ago the man softly says goodnight he softly said goodnight this is the end, goodnight.
