

Whiskey On A Sunday
The Dubliners

 C Am Dm F G C
He sits on the corner of Beggars Bush, the stride of an old packing case,
 Am Dm F G
And the dolls at the end of the plank were dancing, as he crooned with a smile
on his face.

[Chorus]

 Am Dm G C
Come day go day, wishing my heart it was Sunday,
 Am Dm G C
Drinking Buttermilk all the week, Whiskey on a Sunday

His tired old hands from the wooden beam,
And the puppets they danced up and down,
A far better show than you ever will see,
In the fanciest theater in town.

In nineteen O two old Seth Davy died,
And his song was heard no more,
The three dancing dolls in the dustbin were thrown,
And the plank went to mend the back door.

On some stormy night when you're passing that way,
With the wind blowing up from the sea,
You can still hear the sound of old Seth Davy,
As he croons to his dancing dolls three.
